Viet Namh Conditions For Peace

FIGHTING GOES ON

Paris, Jan. 10.
The French News Agency, in a dispatch from Saigon, said Viet Namh radio to-day announced that President Ho Chi-minh has sent a letter to the French Government outlining the conditions which Viet Namh considers necessary for restoration of peace in Indo-China.

The following are the conditions:—

1. Immediate cessation of hostilities in Cochinchina and Annam and Tonkin Provinces;
2. Settling into operation the Commissions for application of the September 14 modus vivendi;
3. Immediate resumption of the Franco-Vietnamese conference in order to arrive at a definite settlement of Franco-Vietnamese relations.

The letter recalled the friendship between the French and Indo-Chinese and blamed the present conflict on the "policy of force practised by certain representatives of France and Indo-China."

Meanwhile, the French High Command communique to-day said Viet Namhese in the Glanum region have been pushed back to the town of Thonol in a series of night operations by French forces.

There was some desultory Viet Namh artillery fire in Hanoi during the night and concentrated principally in the area where the Pasteur Institute and Shell Building stand.

TOWN RECAPTURED

French forces have recaptured the important frontier town of Son La near the Chinese border in Indo-China, French dispatches from Hanoi said.

French sources said the action indicated that French forces were regaining control of the frontier areas.

French dispatches said the Viet Namh President, Ho Chi-minh, had sent a letter to the French government outlining conditions which he would consider necessary to re-establish peace, including renewal of talks for definite settlement.—United Press

REINFORCEMENTS ARRIVE

Saigon, Jan. 10.
The French liner Pastour to-day arrived at Saigon with troop reinforcements including the First Marine Regiment for the French forces now fighting in northern Indo-China.

The High Commissioner, Admiral Thierry D'Argenlieu, said on their arrival that "it is incorrect to say that a state of war reigns in Indo-China. The simple truth is that some operations for re-establishment of order are now in progress at certain points."—Reuter.

CRIME ON DECREASE IN HONGKONG

Police Steadily Winning Fight With The Underworld

YOU MAY FIND THIS HARD TO BELIEVE, BUT CRIME, SO FAR AS ROBBERIES ARE CONCERNED, IS STEADILY AND DEFINITELY ON THE DECREASE IN HONGKONG.

Mr D. W. MacIntosh, Police Commissioner, was able to make this clear in an exclusive interview with the "Hongkong Telegraph" to-day. His figures for robberies of all kinds—armed, housebreaking and street incidents—covering the entire colony up to the border for the month of December, were almost half of those for August.

The comparative figures are: August, 72; September 68; October 60; November 42; December 39.

And for these encouraging comparisons, the Police Commissioner assumes, with good reason, that the work of his force is very largely responsible.

Mr MacIntosh did not attempt to minimise the seriousness of Hongkong's crime wave, but he told the "Telegraph" that he believed the "police force," whose morale, he asserted, was extremely high, was operating to the highest point of efficiency possible in view of current conditions.

He re-emphasised that the force was seriously handicapped by lack of up-to-date equipment, the absence of which was entirely due to procurement problems.

FOUR MORE ARRESTS AT TEL-AVIV

Palestine Conference Latest

Jerusalem, Jan. 10.
Four alleged terrorists were arrested to-day during a three-hour search and screening of the inhabitants of Rishon Le Zion, one of the oldest Jewish townships in the country south of Tel-Aviv.

All four are believed to have been wanted by the security authorities for some time.

A number of persons were detained earlier to-day when hotel searches were carried out in the all-Jewish city of Tel-Aviv.

INVITATION TO PARLEY

The Palestine Higher Committee was to-day officially invited by Sir Henry Gurney, Chief Secretary of the Palestine Government, to send a delegation to the Palestine Conference, when it is resumed in London.

Jamal Hussein, Vice-Chairman of the Committee, said that he now considered that the cause preventing the participation of Palestine Arabs had been removed.

"Their attendance had been impeded by the Government's former intervention in the right of Arabs to choose their own delegates," he said.

The Higher Committee will meet on Sunday to consider its reply to the invitation and to select its delegates.—Reuter.

EDITORIAL

Encouraging Crime Report

THE figures given by the Police Commissioner to the "Hongkong Telegraph" (reported elsewhere on this page) conclusively showing that the authorities are surely, even if it is slowly, winning the war against the colony's criminals, are most encouraging and reassuring. We are glad to note, also, that Mr MacIntosh is convinced that the morale of his police force is high, their efficiency worthy, and that he has 200 police reservists in training.

Not that the Police Commissioner is self-satisfied; which is another good thing. The crime situation calls for no complacency. Rather, now that figures indicate the police are beginning to gain a stranglehold on the underworld elements, should every effort be strained to consolidate the gains made during the past three months. For example, it is as soon as possible.

Mr MacIntosh, in his statement, made two other significant points: the inadequacy of street-lighting in many residential areas which is stimulating lawlessness and the serious lack of modern equipment which has proved elsewhere to be indispensable in the job of rounding up criminals. In demanding that both these requirements be treated as factors of the utmost urgency, one must bear in mind the present situation in the hands of the Hongkong Government or private companies. But proper street lighting as a deterrent to thieves and gangsters, and proper equipment for the police force to carry out their work with the utmost effectiveness, must be counted as top priority concerns, and under no circumstances must they be permitted to languish in Secretariat files, to be dealt with at leisure and convenience.

The public must have all the protection available, and the police must be given adequate technical appliances for guaranteeing that protection. Both points are so obvious that there is no further need to stress them.

Truman's Budget Said Excessive

REPUBLICANS OBJECT

Washington, Jan. 11.
President Truman proposed a $37,528,000,000 speeding programme for the Government's next fiscal year and the Republicans promptly blasted it as far too high.

President Truman, in his annual message, called his budget realistic and "hardboiled," but chairman Robert Taber, (Republican of New York), of the House Appropriations Committee, set out to trim it by $8,000,000,000.

"Excessive in many respects," snapped Taber.

Chairman S. Bridges, (Republican, of New Hampshire) of the Senate Appropriations Committee, called the message an "acute shock to American payers" which had expected "tax reduction, debt reduction and cost of living reduction."

Over half America's foreign expenditure during 1947-48 will be in the form of loans for reconstruction or for trade expansion.

The President declared that the need of large-scale general relief was almost over, adding that the termination of UNRRA left the urgent question of refugees and displaced persons.

In addition to the British loan instalment, other foreign expenditures listed by President Truman were:

Export-Import Bank loans, $730,000,000; Foreign relief, $350,000,000; Military expenditures in foreign countries, $645,000,000; Membership of international organisations, $18,000,000; State Department Foreign Relations, $173,000,000; Refugee relief and resettlement programme, $325,000,000; Philippine aid programme, $137,000,000.

Conceding that his estimated cost of national defence is "high," Truman contended:

"Although I expect the United Nations to move successfully toward world security, any cut in our present estimate for 1948 would immediately weaken our international position."

The recommended figure "represents a proper balance between security and economy," he said.

The proposed overall national defence expenditure, of $11,587,000,000 compares with an estimated $15,150,000,000 for the current year for purely military purposes.

Atomic research and administration, now in the hands of the Civilian Atomic Energy Commission rather than the Army's Manhattan project, is due to be allotted $443,000,000, although the anticipated outlay is carried under the "national resources" category rather than national defence.

The Army and Navy together will have an average strength during the year beginning July 1 of 1,640,000 men, about 500,000 less than in the present year.—Associated Press.

Special Race Editions

For the first annual Hongkong Jockey Club spring race meeting to be held since 1941, the "Hongkong Telegraph" next week will be turning out special editions.

A second and final edition will be published on Monday, Tuesday and Saturday, containing results, pari-mutuel prices and winning cash sweepstake numbers for the first six races.

This special edition will be on the streets shortly before 5 p.m.

TEXT OF EXTORTION LETTER

PENINSULA HOTEL ON THE ALERT

Following receipt of an extortion and threatening letter from the "Overseas Youth Action Organisation," extra precautions are being taken at the Peninsula Hotel to protect residents as well as property.

Everything that is delivered to the hotel is being closely scrutinised, while residents have taken it upon themselves to form groups of Vigilantes.

Demand For $5,000

The "Telegraph" this morning was given a copy of the threatening letter received by the management of the hotel. Dated "6th January of the 30th Year of the Republic of China," the letter reads:

"Notice is hereby given to the above Hotel that the Organization has been directed to station in the Hongkong Area aiming at the up-setting of the orders of the British Government, and the termination of Foreign rule in Hongkong. The maintenance fees will, therefore, be subscribed by all big firms in the Colony, and, in this connection, you are to pay the amount of $5,000 once for all.

You are to arrange to send your staff to take the morning express train on the 10th instant, destined for the Ol Kwan Boarding House in Shekling, and have your firm's name "Grand Peninsula" registered on the room booked. The said money will be collected by our representative then, whether on the way or at the boarding house. A delay in payment will then be recognised as hostile, and should you report to the Police for protection, the bombardment will be of a more severe nature than the previous ones.

The Tin Fook Goldsmith and the Sun Sun Hotel have failed to comply with our order, and they will enjoy our exhibited bombing.

(Signed) Chan Chuen, Unit Commander, The Overseas Youth Action Organization.

Saving Space In British Studios

The greatest problem facing British film studios to-day is the shortage of studio floor space, essential materials and worn pre-war equipment. How are British studios combating this problem? By every trick to save space and material, by new British manufacturing equipment, and using new ideas such as "Silent Turnover" to eliminate waste.

A good illustration of what can be done to save space is the example at Denham Studios, England, where on one of the two largest stages there has been a remarkable feat of construction. For Eric Ambler's production, "The October Man," starring John Mills and Joan Greenwood, seven sets have been built on this stage.

Six of the seven sets are interiors of the suburban hotel which is the major background for "The October Man"; the seventh is the interior of a laboratory. Several of the sets are double tier efforts, with a double staircase built up through the centre of the hotel. To photograph scenes of John Mills and Joan Greenwood and Kay Walsh on this staircase, director Roy Baker and Erwin Hillier, the director of photography, used one of the Denham cranes as a rostrum with effective results.

ROBERT TAYLOR IN A WESTERN ROLE

Everything comes to him who waits, and Robert Taylor, who has always wanted to play a Western role, gets his big chance in "Billy the Kid," dramatic saga of the last frontier and of the man who wrote Western history in gun smoke.

The spectacular new M-G-M production was filmed in Technicolor and was photographed on four locations in Arizona's picturesque Monument Valley.

Although Taylor is a skilled horseman and owner of his own stables, his first Western role caused him long hours of study in other fields. He took lessons in handling a gun from a rodeo star for weeks before he was satisfied with his ability to portray "The Kid."

What made it harder was the fact that he had to learn to use the gun with his left hand!

The film is currently showing at the King's.

Hardwicke Defends Old Movie Colony

Now look who's defending Hollywood—Sir Cedric Hardwicke!

"The motion picture does not profess to be an art," he said while sipping coffee with spoon in the cup—on the set.

"It is an industry, and as such it does a magnificent job. This is the only place in the world where there is lightness and gaiety. Hollywood brings brightness into millions of humdrum lives."

Sir Cedric is gloomier about his own medium—the stage. "In the theatre they are more interested in selling their plays to the movies than in putting on good productions," he remarked.

Scene from "Tarzan and the Leopard Woman" shows Tarzan (Johnny Weissmuller) being threatened by Queen Loza (Acquanetta), priestess of a murdering sect of jungle outlaws. The film is now at the Alhambra.

It happened in Hollywood

By LEROY MARCH

Charles Chaplin steadily refers to the picture he's now making, "Monter Vieux," as a comedy, but, possibly at the risk of displaying ignorance, I can't quite see eye-to-eye with Chaplin on this classification. Charlie, in the title role, is more than somewhat addicted to murdering women, and is finally hauled off to the guillotine to make amends for this lethal hobby. This doesn't sound at all comic.

With the talking picture now celebrating its 20th anniversary, it's particularly interesting to look back at one set of comments made on a test report on Fred Astaire, one of the first persons brought from Broadway and considered for talkie stardom. This initial report on Fred said: "Difficult to photograph. No dramatic ability. Poor speaking voice. Thin hair. Not a romantic type. Dances."

Bing Crosby is firm in his contention that he's through with radio unless he is allowed to make the programme on records for rebroadcast, rather than be upon to do a "live" show before an audience at a certain hour every week. Bing favours this transcription system because it would allow him to get as many shows ahead of broadcast schedule as he might choose to, and thus he would not be confined to town for his radio appearances week after week.

As soon as Louis Calhern finishes "Arch of Triumph" in Hollywood he will return to New York to take over once again the starring role in "The Magnificent Yankee" on the stage there, and when the play has completed its run he will come back to star in it as a picture.

HOLLYWOOD HEARSAY: Gilbert Roland will probably become the Cisco Kid just as permanently as Bill Boyd has become identified with the Hopalong. He will probably become the Cisco productions already released didn't cost too much to make, and are proving exceptionally popular and profitable at the box office....Alexis

WOMEN'S INTERESTS

Berlin idea of what's smart...

IN an attempt to put German fashion houses back on their feet Berlin is holding its first large-scale post-war dress shows.

Sketches here is one of the outstanding designs by a famous German fashion artist.

Chief buyers of the new clothes are the wives of Soviet Army officers. They are paying as much as £125 to secure new models; as much as £50 to have a dress made up in their own material.

The main interest of these clothes from the fashion angle is the way they repeat the new trends already reported from London and Paris.

Working in isolation, the German designers have arrived at the rounded neckline, softened sleeve, deep cut neck, narrow waistline, and back-of-the-head hat, emphasising that the new softened silhouette represents a world-wide change-over in fashion.

The Perfect Figure

Zoe Mozart, whose job it is to design eye-appealing wall calendars featuring girls, has given her observation that the perfect face and the perfect figure have yet to be combined in one woman.

She adds: "The woman with a perfect figure has a broad nose with a flat bridge and an upturned tip, high cheek bones and a pointed chin."

As examples, she cites motion picture actresses Marlene Dietrich, Claudette Colbert, Miriam Hopkins and Margo.

SEAWEED AND PEANUTS

From the beaches of the Hebrides and the forests of Brazil comes the basis of much of modern dress.

Seaweed is the source of what is known as "alginate rayon". Latest research is devoted to a new plastic which is convertible into a fantastically fine and soft fibre.

A recent discovery is a wool fibre called ardil, made from peanuts. A complicated chemical process produces a cream-coloured, woolly material superior to the natural article in being non-inflammable and mothproof. Although it does not wear so well as wool, a mixture of wool and ardil gives a highly satisfactory result, and the production is much cheaper.

A filament rayon yarn discovered in Leeds produced the finest worsted cloths the world had yet seen. It had one drawback—it was soluble in an alkali solution, which meant having to have it specially processed every time it required washing.

That is where the seaweed comes in. Alginate rayon, the seaweed fabric, acts as a strengthener to the rayon without coarsening it or adding weight. From the mixture emerges a cloth weighing one and a half ounces a square yard.

Miss Mozart, herself a beautiful brunette, has gazed upon hundreds of feminine models in the last six years while painting four figures each year as a calendar artist. Her calendar girls wear scanty attire or sometimes only a few discreet shadows. Sometimes, she uses herself as a model, with mirrors.

A girl with a broad, upturned nose, high cheek bones and pointed chin can almost invariably be counted upon, she says, to have a high rib box—that is, the bony protuberance under the bosom—and for art purposes that is good.

She will also have a small waist, a high, firm, upturned bosom, small rounded thighs, and finely modelled knees. Also, for some reason, her feet have high arches and she is skilful with her hands, as in cooking or sewing.

Miss Mozart finds that Hedy Lamarr, Norma Shearer and Greta Garbo, all of whom have thin, beautifully formed noses and rounded chins, are inclined to "thickness of body." Betty Grable and Lana Turner "lack rib boxes." Associated Press.

Yellows and greens are returning

These dyes of many colours which helped to protect the combat soldier by giving him camouflage in the jungle and helped to save the airman by giving him a bright yellow-easy-to-see rubber boat for his rescuers to find, at last are back in peacetime production. It is obvious that the ladies are pleased.

Varying shades of yellows and greens are among the colours being used by the Dyers' and Finishers' Association for fabrics which will be used to make this year's smart clothes—party frocks and gay sports outfits.

And the dark navy blue, no longer in prime demand for uniforms, again will give the smart English man and woman dressy suits in the shades they have wanted for so long.

The rubber boats, or dinghies? They are being sold as holiday gifts to give the children more sport at the seaside.—Associated Press.

Should Married Women Work

By LEE KERSH

Wife of Gerald Kersh, the novelist

ALL about me I hear the flutter-headed poppets of a new generation talking weighty nonsense about emancipation—about women's right to work; careers or marriage, and so on.

And whenever I hear them I think of Mme. Curie and Mrs. Jet.

Mme. Curie did work which a navy would boggle at during hours which no trade union would sanction, and at the same time was able to provide her husband with companionship, physical care and spiritual sustenance in a way that few women may boast of equalling.

MRS Jet, an unknown and undistinguished charwoman of my acquaintance, managed through her slavery to the bucket to support for nearly twenty years an invalid husband and to launch four children on to the world with a fair chance at survival.

These two certainly demonstrate that a woman can work and at the same time be a good wife and a good mother.

BUT—and here is the crux of the matter—why should any woman who is neither a Mme. Curie nor a Mrs. Jet want to work outside her home?

Minute Make-up
GABRIELLE

Sallow skin needs care but while giving it care, choose "pinkie" shades in makeup. Wear a Rose-colored scarf next to your skin for the "reflected glow." Deepen your lipstick shade to a Rose-Red. And don't forget to match your lipstick to your nail polish.

There are three kinds of work in the world. The work that you feel—regardless of every other consideration—you've got to do; the work you really have to do in order to earn a living; and every other sort of work.

THE first sort is beyond discussion. You'll do it anyway if you must. You'll do it against your own interest, against the interests of your dependants and the advice of your friends. If you fail you will almost certainly be called a fool. If you succeed at it you may become a genius—like Mme. Curie.

Nor is there much to say concerning the second sort. If you and your dependants cannot survive except as a result of your labour, then that labour becomes no more than an inevitable means to an essential end—as in the case of Mrs. Jet.

It is, therefore, around the third sort of work—work which is probably not of the slightest importance biologically, socially or culturally—that most of the heart-searching controversies centre.

And in this case my vote goes entirely to marriage. It is completely beyond my comprehension why any woman who is happily married and has a home of her own should want to exchange the comparative freedom and the complete authority of such a situation for the difficulties and ambiguities of an outside job.

In her home a woman is—even if she is sole executive and does all her own work—the managing director. Even if her husband is of a difficult temperament, she has at the very least only one person to satisfy with her stewardship—whereas in an office, or a shop, or a factory, there is not only an immediate boss to please, but very often a whole tribe of them.

AT home she is secure from dismissal; she is protected from the worst savageries of climate, since she may adjust her shopping and outdoor work to her barometer. If she is very tired and wants a rest, or very happy and wants a holiday, she can take time off, making up for lost time on some other occasion.

Nor have I any sympathy with the argument that women should work so as to be financially independent. Any woman who feels that she must bring home a pay-check in order to justify her existence has no proper respect for herself or her functions as a wife and mother, as the maker of a home, as helpmate and companion to her husband.

Work is a means to an end; not an end in itself. If you can work towards the happiness of your home and your family—why not get on with that particular job and leave the rest to the less fortunate who have no choice?

BEAUTY ARTS

Posed for Lois Leeds.

The Young Crowd is being hatted—at last!

NEW HATLINE!

A charming new hat is made of brushed jersey, embroidered with brilliant sequins and the crown is reversible.

Mary Kelly, of the Millinery Fashion Bureau, who knows all about the newest ideas in hats, sent me this information the other day.

A fashion which the girls of the younger set have taken to their hearts—and their heads—is the nonchalant little softie hat. Sponsored by leading "name" designers and promptly copied at pin-money prices, are the wonderfully wearable, perfectly pocketable cloches, berets and helmets, hand-crocheted of wool or chenille and high-lighted with a thread of gold or silver.

Soft, unblocked hats of felt skirting, ranging from snug little caps to big, blousy foris, may be as simple or as dressy as a girl wishes and they can be had in all the bright shades, sophisticated neutral shades and the dark tones.

Other little hats look like nothing when they are held in the hand. They are clever creations made of novelty knitted fabrics. Sometimes the hat is just nothing but a tube of jersey, lined with a contrasting colour and edged with gold beads. It can be draped on the head and shaped into a variety of flattering styles.

Festive hoods twinkle with patterns of sequins, nailheads, jet and pearls, while the skating styles pair brilliant colours or frame the face in fluffy fur.

Most glamorous of all are the simple silhouettes, such as the cap, beret and snood, crocheted entirely of gold or silver mesh. College girls love these, squawky hats and they tuck them into their pockets while running around.

NEW SANDAL SHOE

The new sandal shoe, with cut-away heel, is responsible for one of the most attractive fashions which Britain's stocking trade has yet thought of. And even this is not yet in production, but the trade has great hopes. This is a fully-fashioned nylon stocking with lace inset into the heel, so that as the wearer turns her back the spectator sees not merely a neatly-seamed heel on, let us hope, a pretty foot, but a strip of lace ingeniously set in so that the heel seems to be slimmer than it really is.

The possibilities of this kind of thing were fully exploited in earlier centuries, when stockings bore cloches which, never seen normally beneath long feminine skirts, nevertheless had possibilities when worn by men whose stocking question was of far more importance.

It is fairly probable that with the new sandal shoes, cut away at the toes and heels until only the smallest amount of vamp is left, new embroidered or decorated stockings will make their appearance.

SCIENCE TRENDS:

They'll Talk Themselves Into The Frying Pan

By A. L. BLAKESLEE

Some fish and other noisy tenants of the sea may talk themselves into the frying pan.

Numerous kinds of fish and marine life make noises, varying from clicks to grunts and sounds like the beating of tom-toms. Some of these are very loud.

Tests are under way to find whether these sounds can be used to catch fish, said engineers of the Submarine Signal Coy., of Boston. The problem principally is one of developing instruments to record, amplify and follow the noises made by commercially-valuable schools. The fish would give themselves away by their own "chattering."

Sound already is being used, though in a quite different way, to detect fish. The fathometer has long been used to measure water depth and map the ocean bottom by sending out sound vibrations which bounce or echo back. Since the speed of sound in water is known—4,800 feet per second—the depth of water can be determined by how long it takes the sound to travel from ship to bottom and back. The instrument records the depth automatically.

Fishermen use the instrument to locate good fishing grounds, such as the edge of an underwater canyon, or to find their way back to the same spot. The instrument has also actually located swimming schools of fish by sound vibrations, and the instrument shows at what depth the school is swimming.

Underwater warfare and the development of better sound equipment intensified interest in fish noises. The racket raised by some forms of marine life often posed problems in sound detection work during the war and caused false reports of submarines, exploding mines or other dangers.

Considerable varieties of fish have voices, says Dr C.M. Breder, chairman and curator of the Department of Fishes of the American Museum of Natural History.

Some, like the croaker and drumfish, make noise by vibrating their balloon-like air bladders with their muscles. The sound from big schools often keeps anchored fishermen awake. It can be heard sometimes ashore like low thunder.

Other fish grind their teeth, and some make grunting noises. Even the silent clam makes a noise when it drags itself through sand, for sound carries intensely through water. The little puffer fish apparently makes a gringing sound as it feeds. Dr Breder said, for other puffers immediately swarm around when one finds food. Its table manners may give it away. Porpoises have a wide vocal range, and their sounds can be heard through aquarium glass. The tiny sea horse makes a faint clicking sound.

The snapping shrimp, about one and a half inches long, makes a click by snapping its pincers together. The noise from thousands or millions of them along shrimp beds can blank out other sounds. Because of this, the snapping shrimp helped American submarines during the war. The shrimp noise could ruin the hearing for an enemy sound man, and the submarine could take refuge by going to shrimp beds.—Associated Press.

The Human Volcano

JAMES AGATE

"The Letters of Alexander Woollcott," edited by Beatrice Kaufman and Joseph Hennessey. (Casell, 12s. 6d.)

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT had more than his share of the minor frailties. He was bad-tempered and ill-mannered, and made capital out of his temper and manners. But he had the compensating qualities of energy and industry.

A few people liked him very much, though most people disliked him for that boorishness which he cultivated to the point when it became second nature.

Even so everybody respected or at least was aware of this human volcano continually in eruption and seldom less than sizzling.

Nature gave Woollcott health as rude as everything else about him. From his attack of mumps in 1909 to his breakdown in 1940 brought on by overwork he did not know a day's illness. He had decided that his body was his servant and not his master, and he worked that body to its last ounce.

In this he was like Charles Dickens, who wrote: "Too late to say, put the curb on, and don't rush at him—the wrong man to say it to. I have now no relief but in action. I am become incapable of rest. I am quite confident I should rust, break, and die, if I spared myself. Much better to die, doing."

Then, of course, there was the necessity to keep his end up. In the bungalow closest to his lived George Kaufman, Moss Hart, Charles Laughlin, Robert Benchley and Dorothy Parker—a pretty bunch to hold one's own with. But he succeeded. He met defeat at the hands of one woman only, Mrs. Patrick Campbell of whom he writes:

"I vastly enjoyed a visit from Mrs. Pat Campbell recently. She came here to dinner, bringing with her a snow-white Pekinese named Moonbeam. In her little black velvet bag, in addition to her powder-puff, lipstick, handkerchief, small change and letters from Shaw, she had a chicken bone with which to feed him after his performance in her play."

But did Woollcott really enjoy that visit? I doubt it. I should like to know what was the remark which prompted him to write of Mrs. Pat: "She is like a sinking ship firing on its rescuers."

Open this book anywhere and you will find it fun. I like the story of the actor who was behind with his room rent and left with his landlord came to throw him out and to say that he had gone to Cartier's to buy a few diamonds.

Children's Corner

Conducted by Uncle Peter

A WANDERLUST STORY

Quite a number of Britain's boys and girls seem to have been bitten by wanderlust recently.

There was Peter Anderson, aged eleven, who flew all by himself the three thousand miles from Britain to spend his holidays with his "American mother"—the American lady who cared for him when he was evacuated from Britain to America early in the war.

Lorna Jean Taggart, aged only eight, flew across the Atlantic alone in the other direction, for she went to Britain to visit her grandparents. Then there is Cecily Williams. Her story really begins over a hundred years ago, when her great-great-grandmother, then a baby, set off with her parents for America. The journey took three months by boat. In 1940 our modern Cecily, at the age of nine months, travelled to Britain to visit the home of her ancestors—but she travelled by air! The Williams family say that they can vouch that both babies behaved splendidly on their journeys!

Lastly there is Charles Rual, who was a page boy in one of London's big hotels. All his life (he is fourteen years old) Charles Rual dreamed of travelling and seeing far-away lands. A South American shipowner stayed in the London hotel, heard about Charles' longings, offered him a job in South America. Charles is there now. Wish him luck, won't you?

Rupert and Ninky—12

In two days the donkey is finished and Rupert gazes at it in delight. "Don't you think he has a nice kind face?" smiles Mrs. Bear. "He's a fine donkey," laughs Mr. Bear, "but he doesn't look very briny, does he? In fact, I think he looks a bit of a nincompoop!" "Oo, what a lovely word!" cries Rupert. "I don't now what it means, but I shall call him Ninky, for short. I'll ask Bill to call him Ninky, too. Now for some paper and string. I must pack him up."

spade suit, there wasn't much choice but to rebid.

West opened the diamond Jack. The king won, and South sternly resisted the impulse to draw trumps. True, he might get out the trumps at the cost of only two tricks, and might then be able to run all the diamonds (finishing a 2-3 break of that suit), but he knew that such perfect breaks were not to be expected.

At the second trick South ruffed a heart. He returned to dummy with a diamond and ruffed another heart, then laid down the diamond queen. West ruffed and, for want of a better play, returned a high heart. South ruffed and led his last diamond. West ruffed this too, while a club was discarded from dummy, and led the heart ace.

East could have made things difficult for declarer by ruffing this trick with an honour, but he couldn't be greatly criticised for discarding a club. South did not ruff this time—he too discarded a club. Now, when West attempted to exit by leading the blank king of trumps, South politely declined the trick, and West had to lead clubs, establishing South's king. Thus, the game-going contract was fulfilled.

THE FIRST OF A FASCINATING SERIES OF ARTICLES

THIS IS HOW RUSSIA

REALLY LIVES

HOW DO THE ORDINARY RUSSIAN MEN AND WOMEN LIVE?

We have all read the mysteries of Moscow; the inside stories—told usually from the outside. But these dips into the so-called diplomatic world are not Russia—the ordinary, everyday Russia which has to get on with its business of living.

To-day the Hongkong Telegraph begins a series of articles which tell you how people really live there. The author was British Press Attaché in Moscow from 1942 to 1945. He edited the British Ally, a daily paper printed in Moscow.

By JOHN LAWRENCE

Formerly of the British Embassy in Moscow

FAMILY relations in the Soviet Union nowadays are not so different as one might suppose from family relations elsewhere.

Young people dream of romantic love and like to read love stories. The ideal set before them, both by the State and by public opinion, is to marry and live faithfully and to bring up a family.

It is considered good if man and wife can stick through life with their first choice, but allowance is made for the frailty of human nature, and if two persons cannot get on together public opinion does not condemn them for separating.

The State at first maintained a neutral attitude, but has now begun to take a hand. Since 1944 it has been impossible to get a divorce without going to court, and the cost of divorce is substantial.

Good Parents

The most effective discouragements, it seems to me, lay in the provision that everyone seeking a divorce must publish his intention in the local newspaper.

In Moscow there was only one paper which accepted such announcements, and it limited itself to three a day, so that there was a long waiting list.

Soviet citizens do not attach any importance to having their "marriage lines" and it is up to any couple to decide whether to call themselves man and wife or not.

On occasion a girl will refer to a man as her husband; soon after she may deny that she is married. Nobody minds.

One meets none of the sex-starved people so common in our own society, but there are plenty of neurotic people of other kinds in Russia. To do justice to some of the extraordinary life-stories I have been told would need the qualities of Chekhov and Edgar Allan Poe combined.

After making allowances for vagaries of the Russian temperament, one does come across an unduly high percentage of psychological casualties. I leave it to wiser heads than mine to say what part in this is due to overcrowding and to the hardships and uncertainty of a revolutionary period and what to too much sexual licence.

Taking the good with the bad, the Soviet code of sexual ethics has worked out fairly well in terms of human happiness. The Russians are excellent parents, but it is sad to see so many children with step-parents. Everyone now seems agreed that in the past things were too lax.

Abortion is now forbidden under severe penalties, but it is very prevalent.

The Women

WHAT about the women of Russia? This is the verdict of Kay Oakman, a member of my staff in Moscow.

Women in Russia do a lot of heavy work—for instance, taking up redundant tramlines and repairing roads, clearing the streets of snow, which packs down hard—sometimes to a depth of nearly a foot.

Russian women are much tougher than ours. They are short and very sturdy, but it seems to me that they are allowed to do nearly all the hard graft yet are not in the least exempted from the normal household chores.

I think the position of women may alter now that the war is over, partly because there will be more men to do the heavy labour, and partly because the Russian authorities realise the necessity for women in the home.

This is shown by their recent decision to separate the education of boys and girls.

It is a fact that women in Russia to-day are deficient in the art of home-making. Very few can sew well enough to make their own clothes. Hardly any can knit. When any of the British girls, obliged to wait somewhere, look out their knitting to occupy the time

It makes all the difference if you are registered at a good shop, at least entitled to buy up to a high "limit," for not all customers are permitted to make the same purchases.

There is no system of rationing for clothes and goods other than food comparable with our system of rationing, but the same result is achieved in another way.

The amount of goods you can buy—and, in some cases, the discount at which you buy them—is fixed according to the work you are doing. Further it is usual for the employer to supply the employee with at least some clothes, so that your standard of dress depends on the organisation you work for as well as on the work you do.

Russian queues are longer and move more slowly than ours do, and Russian officialdom has the vices of bureaucracy in a very special degree.

Serious Crime

As a result, it takes a long time to get anything done, and the dependants are generally very busy standing in queues and drawing supplies for the household. In addition, they have to do any buying on the open market.

These markets, which exist everywhere, are ordinary open-air markets with stalls, and anyone is allowed to trade there. You can sell the produce of your own work for whatever you can get. For instance, if you grow vegetables on your allotment you can sell them for the best price you can get, so long as you and your family have done all the work.

But if you employed somebody else to work for you and then sold the produce for a profit, this would be "exploitation," and you would be in serious trouble if found out.

Similarly if you buy somebody else's produce for resale—that is, if you act as a middleman—you are guilty of speculation, which is one of the most heinous crimes in the Soviet calendar.

By the strict letter of the law it is forbidden to exchange products (as opposed to selling) at the markets. But a good deal of bartering does go on, and the police sometimes wink at it.

It is possible to get most kinds of foods at the market, including bread, milk, butter, vegetables, potatoes, and even good quality meat.

Prices

From the spring of 1944 the "commercial shops" began to re-open. These are State-owned department stores. The biggest in Moscow is officially known as the Moscow, but is often called by its old name "Muir and Mirreces."

(This shop was founded by a Scottish family before the revolution, and is not the only case of a shop that has been taken over by the State still being called by the name of its former owner.)

The policy of diverting practically all factory production to war needs got the country through the military crisis, but in turn produced problems which required a urgent remedy. Not merely did people's clothes and household necessities begin to wear out, but the food shortage became seriously aggravated.

There was always enough food in the country to have enabled the towns to live a good deal better than they did, but the peasants did not feel the need to undertake long and difficult journeys to town to sell their products in exchange for a pocketful of roubles with which nothing could be bought. This is a well-known type of crisis which occurs whenever there is a famine of goods.

Rush, then—

A situation was developing with very large potential purchasing power in the hands of the public—particularly the peasants—but with no way of absorbing this purchasing power into circulation. Prices of uncontrolled goods soared, and the peasants saw still less object in bringing food into market.

The Government solved both problems—simultaneously by putting a limited supply of goods on sale at the commercial shops at prices fixed by the ordinary process of supply and demand, and by calling these shops commercial shops.

At first the prices were fantastic by our standards, but the shops were overcrowded from the start. As soon as the first wave of buying was over the prices fell, and have since tended to fall.

Nowadays everybody uses the commercial shops to some extent, though, of course, privileged people are able to use them more. Army officers and those whose work is considered important receive a discount of up to about 20 per cent.

"Commercial restaurants" were opened soon after the commercial shops and by the end of last year it was possible to have a good meal with drinks for about the same price as one would pay in a London restaurant.

Nothing like our intimate Soho restaurants, but it is always possible to get a small private room for a party.

Advertising

ADVERTISING does not play the exaggerated part that it does in capitalist countries, and one is free from the unscrupulous attempts of some Western advertisers to exploit human failings and anxieties.

But, none the less, placards exhort you to subscribe to State loans, and one of the best advertising spaces in Moscow is occupied by an enormous picture telling you to insure your life while there is yet time.

Advertisements in the newspapers are mainly from factories trying to obtain special types of workers, but theatres, cinemas and public lectures are advertised just as they are here.

In the Soviet Union there are no small tradesmen: the prohibition on speculation and on employing labour makes it impossible to keep a small shop.

It is open to a group of craftsmen to go into partnership as an artel, which is a simple form of producers' "co-op" traditional in Russia. There are, for instance, many artels of watch-makers.

Skilled workers often earn extra money in their spare time, but generally the little man does not flourish as an economic unit. And I say the Soviet Union is the poorer.

NO ADVANTAGE IN BEING 36

MR HAROLD NICOLSON writes a delightful article in the Spectator on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday. "I see no advantage in being 60," he says. "I wish I wasn't."

And yet I envy him. Who (like me) would want to be born in the early years of this century? It was too late.

First we had a war, followed by rationing and high prices. After that we had a depression, wars in China, Abyssinia and Spain, and then war everywhere all over again. And now more rationing.

More than half my life has been spent under rationing, war and depression.

Now the sixty-year-olds had a fine time. From their birthdays in 1886 until 1914—time enough to grow up and get married and have children—they lived in an era of prosperity.

No doubt some of the more earthy characters spoiled it all by drinking too much port; and the worker, maddened by his living conditions, was driven into the gin shop. (I believe the advertisements used to run: "Drunk for a penny; dead drunk for a shilling.")

But sober, sensible, fortunate people like Mr Nicolson roamed the world at leisure, consumed the finest foods, studied at the best academies, entered on successful careers and, never, never, never stood in a queue.

By ALAN MOOREHEAD

No wonder the parents of my generation used to pine for their lost youth and tell us that boyhood was the happiest time of life. It was—for them. But not, I submit, for us.

We never had the joy of riding in a hansom cab, or drinking prewar beer of fineering golden gavelings, or cycling placidly in straw boaters and reading Marie Corelli.

We can only remember a world deafened and bedazzled by the multiplying noises of the airplane, the telephone, the radio and other high explosives—none of which has contributed much to human happiness.

We lost in other ways. England was a place of talent when the 60-year-olds were coming into their prime. At the turn of the century men like Shaw, Bennett, Sturt, Barrie, Galsworthy, Wells, Hardy, Pinter, Maugham, Kipling and Gosse had either arrived or were about to spread their wings.

ZBW Should Wake Up!

WHEN twiddling the knobs of my radio set the other night, I suddenly came upon a station in English which, at the conclusion of a refreshing musical item, announced its closing down for the night.

Before signing off, the announcer gave particulars of the following day's programme. Apart from a well-assorted selection of items, he announced that news and other announcements would be broadcast in seven or eight languages. The station was Singapore.

What an opportunity Hongkong is missing!

I am, of course, assuming that ZBW can be heard for a few hundred miles; and taking such to be the case, what a lot of good might be done by putting on the air programmes calculated to foster more friendly relations with our neighbours. A few heart-to-heart talks by fluent speakers, stressing the better and happier things in life. An effort to make the other fellow understand our point of view, and to realise that the wider his knowledge of world affairs, the more likely he is to discover what weaknesses may lie in pursuing an isolationist policy.

If the voice of Hongkong can reach Japan, there is a very particular reason why it should be heard in that country. To give the Japanese a picture of what Hongkong was when they were driven out—to what a state their militarists had reduced it—and to tell them how, under a resumption of British rule, justice and sanity again reign. A few extracts from the evidence being heard in the War Crimes Courts should have a profound effect.

I should like to see reciprocal radio talks between Hongkong and Canton and other Chinese cities. We should then learn a lot about each other, and from this we might well go on to interpret quiz contests. We sometimes feel that Chi wishes to remain an enigma, but feel sure that mutual regard will be encouraged by means of a medium which is at the disposal of both sides, and which can be highly entertaining and instructive.

ZBW does not earn high praise for its programmes, and it is about time that it took a little more pride in its work in the interest of the Colony generally.

I often listen in to Manila, because the programmes are appealing and have the saving grace of originality. I wonder whether Manila listeners find Hongkong as exhilarating!

I don't grouse just for the sake of grouching. In fact, I consider that what Hongkong needs above all things is some really constructive criticism—call it grouching if you will. Of course all this is useless, if as usual one is saddened in calling to mind the water and the duck's back.

Nothing comparable in the arts has happened since then. This is an age without elegance or wit. There are scarcely half a dozen first-class playwrights working for the English stage, not a dozen first-class novelists in the world.

The only really sociologically important thing that has happened in my lifetime—the discovery of penicillin—doesn't seem much to put against the vast explorations with which the 60-year-olds grew up.

To say that genius thrives on poverty seems to me to be the purest bunkum. Whether it is an opera star, a poet or a cricketer, you have to feed them up on steak and eggs to get the best results. (Let us leave Bernard Shaw out of this.)

One of the saddest things I've heard—sad and threatening—was this homily from the lips of a West End maître d'hôtel, who worked in London under Escoffier in 1913 or thereabouts:

"When you ordered turtle soup it was made from real turtle. Everything was genuine and abundant. Then after the first world war the quality of food and cooking in England collapsed. By 1939 it had still not recovered. Now the quality has slumped still further. I shall never see turtle soup again."

I know you will argue that the 60-year-olds have had to suffer all this as well as I. But at least they got off with a good start and they have their memories. If anything good comes along now I doubt whether my generation has either the taste or the constitution to enjoy it.

I shall tell my children that old age is the best time of life, since things ought to be improving as I go. In the meantime I can see no advantage in being 30. I wish I wasn't. I wish I were 60. Or 60. Or yet unborn.

MOTHER'S CHRISTMAS WITH DYING SON

Mrs. J. A. Smith of 25, Albion Street, Dunstable, Bedfordshire, thinks herself England's luckiest mother because her most remote Christmas wish came true, recently.

Year in Hospital

As a result of a chance letter to Lady Louis Mountbatten, she arrived in Johannesburg, by luxury plane in time to spend Christmas with her dying son.

"I was in at the start of this most human story fifteen months ago when British troops entered Singapore," writes Frank Roston, Daily Express reporter in Johannesburg.

"One of the first women to follow us into the liberated areas of the Far East was Lady Mountbatten. She raised the morale of liberated prisoners of war tremendously when she visited them in their camps. I remember her finishing her talks with: 'Now, boys, if there's anything I can do don't hesitate to let me know. And I mean that.'"

At Changi, Pte Edwin Smith listened with his pals. For the last year Smith has been among the six hundred British war wounded still languishing in Baragwanath Hospital, just outside Johannesburg. A few months ago medical officers indicated that Smith was sinking slowly through tuberculosis, with little chance of living.

"His mother started trying to come to South Africa to see her son before he died. She was willing to travel by cargo boat, cattle ship, any way—but in vain. At last a couple of Edwin's hospital-ward mates had a brainwave and wrote to Lady Mountbatten. She arranged immediately for Mrs. Smith to fly to Johannesburg. 'I met her in Edwin's Christmas-festooned ward quietly reading to him. Edwin himself removed his oxygen mask to say: 'This is my luckiest break of the war.'"

BILLIARDS AND SNOOKER

Arthur Peall says

When you are playing pool or snooker, it is not only the skill of the player but also the skill of the opponent. A player who is not careful of his opponent's position will be at a disadvantage. A player who is not careful of his opponent's position will be at a disadvantage. A player who is not careful of his opponent's position will be at a disadvantage.

THE LAWS OF FOOTBALL OFFSIDE-3

How much a bone of contention is the offside law was amply shown in the correspondence columns of the local press this week. Last week I outlined the two basic parts of the law; this week it is the "un-lesser" I wish to enlarge upon.

The latest issue of the "Referees' Chart" (I received a copy only this week) sets them out very clearly under four separate headings. A player is not offside if he is in his own half of the field (when the ball is played mind you), has two opponents between him and their own goal-line, the ball is touched or played by an opponent or it comes to him from a goal-kick, corner kick, throw-in or when it has been dropped by the Referee.

It isn't often that a question of offside arises from goal or corner kicks or when the referee drops the ball; I have often seen forwards run back as the ball is being thrown in from touch under the impression, of course, that they may be ruled offside. As soon as the ball is touched by another player that protection comes to an end.

KEEP OUT OF THE WAY
The Referees' Chart (which includes on each page a column headed "Advice to Players") is at some length to remind players that if they are offside when the ball is kicked the only thing they can do is to keep out of the way. Only by an opponent playing the ball or by it going out of play can a player become on-side.

It is left absolutely to the discretion of the referee whether he shall penalise a player who is offside. Referees are directed not to whistle up players who are in offside positions if, in their opinion, they are not interfering with play or in any way benefiting from being offside. Many full backs will do well to bear this point in mind.

SPORTS FEATURES

SOCCER SEASON'S HIGHLIGHT IN FORTNIGHT'S TIME

LOCAL soccer interest is now rapidly concentrating on the Interport matches to be played on Jan. 22, 23, 25 and 26. To-morrow, at Causeway Bay, the principal trial match for the selection of the Hongkong team will be played. If this match produces the same bright football as we saw in the trial game at the Caroline Hill on Tuesday the big crowd which is expected will certainly have its money's worth.

This afternoon sees a resumption of the Shield Competition. Eight first division sides meet in second round matches. Two of these matches may prove one-sided; but the games in which the Navy meet Kwong Wah (Navy ground 2.30) and St Joseph's meet 45 Commando (Navy ground 4.15) are full of interest. Kwong Wah expect to field a much stronger side than that which fell to South China last Sunday and will fully extend the Navy. St Joseph's are well matched with 45 Commando; indeed, this is the tit-bit of today's fixtures and it will be no surprise if extra time is played.

VALUE OF TRIAL MATCHES

A lot of people don't like trial matches; they argue that they prove nothing and as often as not are a waste of time. I have seen many sorts of trial matches, some have produced dull football, others the reverse. If nothing else such matches show a player's adaptability; whether he can adjust his game to fit in with strangers with whose style of play he is unfamiliar. A trial match also has the virtue of freeing players from week-by-week routine—in other words they can have a go on their own if they feel like it and very often they surprise themselves.

I thought Tuesday's match was full of interest. I noticed that Hau, Sing Tach right back, was often to be seen mixing it with the half backs, quite enjoying himself in breaking strange ground. All the players who caught my eye as fairly sure of their places were in the same side. They were Hau (Sing Tach), Lau Chung-sang, Sing Tach, playing at right half back, Haggie (Navy), inside right and Tsao (Sing Tach), in his usual place on the left wing. Schultz, of Land Forces, who played at inside right for the opposing team and moved to centre forward in the second half, was a newcomer who has many possibilities. I liked his tricky footwork and the confidence with which he out-witted Powell in scoring early in the second half.

Schultz, who is playing in tomorrow's trial, is rather like Stuck-land of the RAF. He is obviously an accomplished footballer but is handicapped by lack of height and weight. Stuckland is a grand player but has two very redoubtable candidates for the inside forward berth who have stronger claims. Lai Shui-wing of Sing Tao and Chow Man-chi of South China both have consistent records of steady up-top play to their credit.

UNSOLVED PROBLEM

The centre forward problem, however, is unsolved. There is a whole string of names who all will fit into any other forward position, each one of whom can be guaranteed to feed a sharp shooting leader of the attack. A few weeks ago Jones of the Navy showed much promise but has not come up to expectations. The selectors will just have to face facts and ask themselves the plain question "Who will do better than Lee Wal-tong as leader of the Hongkong attack?" The question must be answered very soon. What a relief it would be if only Redman, late of 1/5 Commando, were available!

Missed penalty kicks have again been very frequent. In the trial match on Tuesday a spot kick settled the cross bar. In Saturday's Navy v. St Joseph's match spot kicks were missed by both teams. The Saints might have saved a point had they converted theirs. CASC have also missed penalty kicks which would have altered the whole course of the game. A goal-keeper has little hope of saving the well-placed kick. He is compelled to stand on his goal line until the ball is kicked; he is not permitted in any way to narrow the angle by advancing towards the ball.

All kinds of suggestions have been made for a goalkeeper when faced with a penalty kick. Some stand just a little to one side of the dead centre usually leaving the right side more unguarded. The idea behind this is that most goal-keepers are much better on their right side (Powell is definitely) and feel easier about that half of the goal. There is also the feeling that they may tempt the kicker to choose the larger space to shoot into.

FASTBALL NOTES

Players And Supporters Have Lost Their Pre-War Enthusiasm

(By "Spectator")

WHAT has come over the local fastball world? There is no getting away that interest has slackened, as is evident in the current League season. This can be seen in the way players turn out in a multi-coloured collection of uniforms with no two alike; the low standard of play—no doubt through lack of practice, if there is any practice at all; the sparsely attended games; the absolute discarding of fastball by the many femmes who did in pre-war days display interest supreme.

Although most, if not all, the women players are back, where is their interest? Let alone not playing, they are seldom seen in numbers at the park. Further, the game is not rooted—there used to be plenty of it—is conspicuous by its absence. Our fans and players alike are awfully quiet these days! One would think they were attending a funeral instead of the spiritedness that goes with fastball.

THE GOOD OLD DAYS

Prewar, on a Sunday, "the family" went to the ball game. All roads led to the Kowloon Fastball Club in Chatham Road. The game was especially packed when there was a big match. It was a pleasure to spend a day there; some brought their lunch baskets. Believe it or not, it did happen! One game after another, first the girls, then the boys, were locked in battle. It was fun for all! Everyone, player and fan, was in the right spirit.

Dotted about the field were the players in neat uniforms according to their club colours. For instance, there were the spic and span whites of the St Joseph's and Cyclopes and the blue and white of the Recrelo among the men. And there were the beautiful colours of the Wahooks, Cardinals and Little Flower Club among the ladies. As the teams were well matched, the rivalry was of the keenest and as a result standard of play was high. The game was speedily by the dynamic ball-playing Fathers, the all-American Mohawks. They were good and you had to be good too to be anywhere near them.

The League over, there was the usual annual dance, the last time at the Rose Room. Peninsula Hotel, where there was a presentation of prizes to the League winners. It will be recalled that Mrs. Dhan Rukongee received the trophies. The 1941 championship was won by St Joseph's in the men's division, the Wild Cats the Ladies' loop and the International Series was won by India.

What's wrong—there is at least something—with our present League? With "pioneer" Prexy Doc Molten, Vice-Pres. Jimmy Shepherd, Hon. Treasurer Dick Chung, hardworking pre-war and present Hon. Sec. Tony Ribeiro and "facts and figures" Philo Remedios—the last named keeping official record of games—at the helm, the running of the League cannot be in better hands. But they are not magicians—they cannot make former mammoth crowds of ball fans, neither can they insist that players hand out a better brand of ball.

There is, however, nothing much wrong with the keenness of the eight teams now competing, or else they would not have been formed. Talking of keenness, the fact that the "tropical-busy-men" Baseballers (all-American?) are still there turning out week after week without fail in spite of defeats—even if they do turn up in their limousines—is one example. Perhaps, the game suffers because players find it difficult to have time to practice to prepare in view of "daylight wasting." Perhaps, it is

WILLS MOODY IN RETIREMENT

BEN COOK
United Press Sports Correspondent

Santa Monica, Calif.
The woman who dominated international tennis two decades ago, Helen Wills Moody Roark, now lives with her memories of past triumphs—content to play tennis occasionally with her husband and work in her garden.

Now 40 years old, Helen plays tennis several times a week with only occasional forays into tournament competition. She spends almost as much time cultivating her flowers and irrigating her avocado and citrus trees as she does winging a tennis racket. But when she does play, Helen Wills Moody still has that grace of stroke that made her one of the world's great feminine stars.

Helen has memories of great moments at Wimbledon and Forest Hills, and she still considers Suzanne Lenglen the late French star whom she never was able to defeat—the best woman tennis player of all time. And that includes the present crop of international stars, led by Pauline Betz of the United States.

Genius Among Women

"Suzanne was a genius among women tennisists, just like Bill Tilden was among the men," she reminisced when interviewed by United Press at her home here. "She had every and she was incomparably steady."
Helen's most recent tournament appearance, and her first since 1941, was last May in the Southern California tennis championships. She teamed with US men's singles champion Jack Kramer to win the mixed doubles title.

"I probably shall continue to play in local tournaments but the big events are out for me so far as the future is concerned," she said. "Her usual opponent these days is her husband, Alden Roark, ex-tennis international known polo player and now a motion picture executive."

Once the toast of the international tennis set, Helen Wills lives a quiet life with Roark at their home in the exclusive Riviera district where they grow flowers, fruits and vegetables, entertain friends and get away occasionally for a five-minute drive to the beach.

"When travelling gets easier we want to go to Europe and up through Scandinavia, spending quite a bit of time in Sweden," she said.

Mrs. Roark revealed that she had been forced to turn down an invitation to join the US Wightman cup team this year, which made a clean sweep of international competition in England and Europe. "Although I wanted to make the trip with them, I just could not be away from home that long," she explained.

She believes that present day girl tennis stars are just as good, overall, as they ever were, including when Helen Wills Moody was a great name in tennis. But Helen does not feel there are the individual greats in tennis to-day as there were two decades ago.

"Pauline Betz does not have to take a back seat to any player," Helen said. "I have not seen a lot of the post-war stars but I Pauline is any example I would say that generally the players are as good as ever."

Helen Wills Moody won her first US singles tennis championship in 1932, when she was 17 years old. For almost a decade, she dominated national and international play.

In Wightman cup matches, she lost only two singles contests while winning 16 from 1923 to 1932.

Her greatest rivalry was with Helen Hull Jacobs to whom she lost by default at Forest Hills in 1933, blaming her action on an ailing back. She came back two years later at Wimbledon when she won one of the historic matches of all time.

Her most active tennis career was over when she and Frederick S. Moody of San Francisco were divorced August 23, 1937. Two years later she eloped with Roark and they were married at Las Vegas, Nevada.—United Press.

Wax Head Produced In Court

Bristol, Jan. 10. There was a gasp from the crowded magistrate's court here to-day when a realistic wax head was produced showing, according to a doctor-witness, the location of the injuries on the head of 34-year-old Cecil Cornock, whose widow is charged with murdering her husband.

The prosecution say that Cornock was drowned after his wife had hit him with a child's toy boat while he was tied up with a rope in a bath.

When the doctor said that the injuries shown on black marks on the model head could have been caused by a toy wooden boat, Mrs. Cornock leaned forward and said quietly: "It is untrue."

Another witness, a police constable, told the court that the 34-year-old widow told him, without reticence of her husband's abnormality.

Mrs. Cornock, the witness said, had stated that they had not lived a normal life during their whole 13 years of marriage.

A locked suitcase held articles of women's clothing and Mrs. Cornock said: "My husband keeps a room in London where he uses these things."—Reuter.

Gissimo Not Catholic

Boston, Jan. 10. The National Catholic Welfare Conference refuted in a statement to-day the report published in the United States that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and his wife are taking instruction in the Roman Catholic religion.

The Conference statement said that a cable received from Nanking on January 3 denied this report.

The statement added: "The Generalissimo has always expressed interest in the work of the Catholic Church in China and its affairs, but stories telling of his proposed entrance into the Catholic Church are without foundation and have no basis in fact."—Reuter.

H.K.V.D.C. Association And Members' Problems

(To the Editor, H.K. Telegraph)

Sir.—We of the association cannot thank the Press too much for the editorials which have been current in local papers.

This point of clothing allowance is one that has assumed such importance—when it could be so easily settled. It is obvious to any person who lives in Hongkong that the amount as a payment in lieu of issue is totally inadequate. Local conditions must be taken into consideration and what is possible in England is not possible here.

The total number of men involved in this matter of clothing is around 500. With the amounts that are being spent here in the colony at the present moment by various government departments the cash necessary to pay an increased allowance is negligible.

At Home millions of men have been demobilised and millions of outfits issued. It would be no great difficulty to send measurements and orders Home from patterns. It is admitted that it might be a little troublesome.

There are other matters which still await consideration by the local government.

After being officially demobilised since January 20, 1946, final cash settlements have not been made. Volunteers whose wives were in Hongkong during the occupation are entitled to marriage allowance. They are very kindly granted a separation allowance which is much less than official army marriage rates.

Members of the Volunteers returning after their internment have found their homes entirely gone and unless they are connected with Government departments or larger Hongkong and it is impossible to carry on paying hotel rates. Some indeed have given up trying and after spending years in the colony have left it with a bitter taste in their mouths. Surely some part of derelictioned property might be allocated to these needy cases.

The Singapore association, although its difficulties are very much the same as ours, has had the pleasure of discussing these difficulties with representatives of the Government. The secretary of this Association wrote to the Colonial Secretary on December 20 last. A reply acknowledging receipt of his letter and stating that information regarding the matters mentioned, which were similar to those mentioned above, would be forwarded in due course. This is after months of trying to get decisions and answers through official channels. It seems that we are up against the brick wall of officialdom. This wall does not seem to let much light in. Otherwise even the blindest of officials must see that there is growing discontent.

Let me assure Government that it has in the Association members, and even those ranks of the H.K.V.D.C. who are not members, who are loyal servants. Loyal servants are always hard to find and are always worth a fair wage or recompense. That is all we ask.

ROBERT LEXON,
Hon Sec H.K.V.D.C. Association.

WORLD FOOD COUNCIL AGREEMENT

Washington, Jan. 10. Full agreement has been reached on the creation of an 18-nation World Food Council within the framework of the United Food and Agricultural Organisation.

The full draft of the agreement is now being completed and studied by member governments, and details are expected to be announced on or around January 20.

The final agreement, it is understood, represents a considerable departure from the original proposals for an "over normal" world granary and sweeping powers for a world food board to buy and store surpluses against the days of scarcity as originally envisaged by Sir John Boyd Orr, UNFAO Director-General.

The agreement similarly leaves discretionary powers to each member government. The chief function of the Council will be to coordinate the work of the Food and Agriculture Organisation with the proposed International Trade Organisation.

In this connection "sample" commodity agreements for all major agricultural commodities have been worked out for eventual implementation by the International Trade Organisation.—Reuter.

FIVE BURNED TO DEATH

Singapore, Jan. 10. Five persons were burned to death and five were critically injured in a Sittawan, near Ipoh, last night. No details of the outrage are yet available, but it is believed to be connected with Chinese political unrest.

The police have spread a wide net for five men who are alleged to have been implicated in the attack. The district has recently suffered from activities of gangsters and kidnappers.—Reuter.

WAR CRIMES COURT PICTURES

The Hongkong Telegraph is indebted to Mrs Hedda M. Morrison for the pictures of Hongkong war crimes courts published on Monday and in today's issue.

A keen photographer, Mrs. Morrison has taken a large number of pictures of Hongkong scenes and happenings since her arrival last year.

Mrs Morrison is the wife of Capt A. R. C. Morrison, adjutant of the HKVDC.

Internment Reflections

THINK NOT OF THESE

Think not of the present's senseless days,
Monotony of hours that crawl.
The organised futility
Of life within a prison's wall.

Think not of weakness, pain and death,
Starvation and the will to die;
The wasted limbs, the laboured breath,
The fevered brow, the unseeing eye.

Think not of treachery, graft, deceit,
The subtleties of the cowed;
The ache of loneliness that comes
From feeling always in a crowd.

Think not of hope so long deferred,
That hearts grow sickened with delay,
And hastened death is even preferred
To the slow torture of decay.

Think not of scores of wasted lives,
Victims of national greed and pride,
The friends that we shall see no more,
Though love of them has never died.

Think not of these; but let the mind
The joys of happier days renew,
Dwell on the past's unbounded space,
And Freedom's unrestricted view.

Nay, think of happy days to be—
The fellowship of sight and hand
Renewed with those we love, return
To the dear shores of our own land.

Of children's laughter, terror free,
Of music, books and holidays,
Of recreation's healthful gifts,
Enjoyment's thousand harmless ways.

Such be the weapons of our fight
Against the mind's anxiety,
Till ends the dark dream of this long night
In the breaking dawn of Victory.

REDS FANNING HATRED

Cleveland, Jan. 10. Former Foreign Minister of Mexico and delegate to the UN Security Council, Exequiel Padilla, speaking before the Institute of World Affairs, to-day charged the Communists with using all in their power to create hatred in Latin America against the United States.

He said it is a great relief to know that the secret of the atomic energy is in the hands of the democracies. When the secret becomes known to the world it will be a day of sadness.—United Press.

Search For Oil In N. Guinea

New York, Jan. 10. The Australian Information Bureau announced to-day that the Australian Petroleum Company soon will undertake an extensive search for oil deposits in fabulously rich New Guinea.

The survey will start at Alcarava, 10 miles inland from the southern coast.

E. J. Hunter, formerly with the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, will be in charge of the survey, which will cost $2,000,000 and which will be financed by three major oil companies.—United Press.
